A LESSON IN MANNERS

Read the story. Then answer the questions.

In the heart of the ancient city of Eloria, there stood a grand library known for its impressive collection of manuscripts and rare books. The library had been established centuries ago and was renowned not only for its extensive archives but also for its stunning architecture. Its tall, vaulted ceilings and intricate stained glass windows created an atmosphere of grandeur and serenity. Scholars and book enthusiasts from across the world visited the library to study and conduct research. One of the most famous items in the library's collection was a manuscript written by an elusive medieval scholar. This manuscript, bound in elaborate leather and adorned with gold leaf, contained forgotten knowledge about ancient civilizations and their mysteries. Over the years, many researchers tried to decipher the complex codes and symbols in the manuscript, but its full meaning remained a mystery. The library also hosted various cultural events, including poetry readings, historical lectures, and art exhibitions. These events attracted a diverse audience and contributed to the cultural richness of Eloria. The library's staff was dedicated to preserving its treasures and making its resources accessible to the public. Their efforts ensured that the library remained a beacon of knowledge and inspiration for future generations.
